FUTURE COURSES I PLAN

---

Psychology of Gender

This course provides an engaging, integrative, and broad overview of gender-related theory and research that can help students to understand the complex dynamics underlying current gender relations and incorporate gender into their own areas of research interest. Topics include evolutionary versus cultural accounts of gender differences; ambivalent attitudes; and the ways gender stereotypes tend to uphold the status quo. It aims for the students to develop and demonstrate critical understanding of how gender stereotypes are proscriptive; result in backlash against atypical people; and gendered attitudes affects romantic relationships.

Advanced Statistics for Psychology

This course includes different types of multivariate statistical analyses in two parts. The first part covers multivariate analyses such as discriminant function analysis, canonical correlation, cluster analysis and the second part teaches the details of Structural Equation Modeling with latent variables. At the end of the course, students will gain the knowledge about conceptual and statistical basis of analyses; determine the type of analysis to apply; excel in using EQS (or LISREL); and present the study results at a level of sophistication that top journals require.

Quantitative Research Methods

This course provides students with the fundamental knowledge of research methods and design used in psychology; facilitates students understanding for how using valid scientific methods can improve and create knowledge in the field of psychology; guides and mentors students in developing, completing, writing, and presenting a valid and ethical psychology experiment. The course covers methods of inquiry; hypothesis testing; types of errors; ethics; plagiarism; reliable and valid research practices; critics of questionable research practices; descriptive statistics; between and within experimental study designs; quasi-experimental and correlational study designs, inferential statistics; and how to prepare a proposal.

Qualitative Research for Psychology

This course would include issues of methodological “quality” and ethics; the role of theory and research questions in the choice of methodology; and the philosophical and epistemological underpinnings of methodology. At the end of the course, students will have detailed knowledge about theory-method link; designing qualitative study; using different data collection methods such as ethnography, observation, in-depth interview, focus-group interview, historical materials, projectives; analyzing and interpreting qualitative data.

Social Psychology

This course explores the prevailing theories and empirical methods in social psychology. It aims to give students an understanding of foundation of social psychology and provide them with perspective to apply for everyday life observations. At the end of the course, students will have detailed knowledge about social perception, attribution, social cognition, attitudes, attitude change and persuasion, stereotypes, prejudice and discrimination.

Political Psychology

This course presents historical and contemporary debates in political psychology. It aims to give insights about why and how people form their political beliefs, attitudes and decisions by focusing on individual, context, and intergroup processes. To this aim, it will cover political attitudes in relation with social groups and values; the role of social identities, intergroup threats, emotions, and personality on sociopolitical attitudes, ideologies, group conflict, racial and sexual prejudice.
